

Nigel Farage to join GB News

For decades, Cl B protested in vain against the BBC's extreme partiality to the Europhile cause and to the GB News team on 19th July with evening programmes starting at 7.00 pm. His previous experience with LBC demonstrated that he is a fluent, effective communicator. He is reported as saying that he will take on the tough issues of the day and interview people who really understand their subjects, not just some minister spouting the party line. He said he wanted to hear from listeners and would not be taking the knee himself. Whilst he was leader of UKIP he took stringent measures to exclude people who had belonged to extremist organisations.

So whilst some of the things he says for instance concerning illegal immigration will be unwelcome in some quarters, he cannot reasonably be accused of racism indeed, Brexit Party MEPs were the most ethnically diverse in the European Parliament. But reason has little to do with the present tone of politics. There is a disconnection between people and politicians which Farage may well be able to bridge at least amongst the Brexiteers.

During the coming weeks whilst Parliament is not in session, he will have an opportunity to sound out the depth and direction of feeling amongst the Brexiteer community. This will be a great service to GB News and to its founder Andrew Neil when he returns from his sojourn in the South of France to resume the struggle and steer the course for GB News in the next session.
